Chapter One: The Law of Infinite Potential

Topic: The Making of a Genius

Book (7 Divine Laws) Page 10 & 11

Let us Recap!

- Victor was born in penury in a slum colony.
- When he was fifteen years old, his schoolteacher declared to him, 'Victor, you are a dunce. You will never amount to anything in life.' Convinced of his stupidity, Victor dropped out of school.
- For the next seventeen years, he engaged in menial works.
- As part of the army selection process, they tested his IQ. His score went beyond the scale (161), which meant he was a genius. That one piece of knowledge transformed his life.
- He became an expert in lumberjack technology and wrote books on the trade. He also researched the topic of Intelligence Quotient, and became an expert, writing widely popular books on it.

Victor's obituary

Victor Serebriakoff - Honorary International President of Mensa born 17 October 1912 - died 1 January 2000

It is with much sadness that Mensa, the high IQ society, reports the death of Victor Serebriakoff, Honorary International President, who died peacefully at his home at Blackheath on Saturday, 1st January 2000 after a long illness. It was sad news indeed but at least Victor lived to see in the Millennium, a goal that was enormously important to him. He had been frail for some years but despite his 87 years, retained his mental faculties to a remarkable degree. He was still organising meetings late last year and would have been aware that he had just lived to see the New Year.

Victor came from a working-class background in the East End of London. His grandparents were Russian, hence the surname. He only discovered his high IQ on taking army intelligence tests after being conscripted towards the end of the Second World War. His first wife Mary encouraged him to join Mensa and he went on to hold several senior positions within the society including Secretary, Chair and editor of Mensa Magazine.

There is certainly no-one in the history of Mensa who has had a bigger influence on the way the society has developed. Without his hard work and enthusiasm back in the 50s and 60s, Mensa may well not have survived.

It is thanks largely to him that there is the flourishing worldwide society enjoyed today by around 100,000 members. He wrote several books on intelligence, helped found a school for gifted children, introduced the formal supervised entrance test for the society, rewrote its constitution in a form which still operates today and encouraged its international development. Mensa was Victor's life.

know it

Albert Einstein: "Everybody is a genius. But if you judge a fish by its ability to climb a tree, it will live its whole life believing that it is stupid."
